

KeyMacro is a macro editor that has a language providing for the creation of macro commands to be used within the editor. These commands may be defined and stored in an external file or they can be defined inline. In addition, the editor offers a text editor of its own and allows you to do spell checking, adding to the list of keywords or the definition of macros, while you work. The Editor supports all the standard UNIX commands and keywords, and can be used on a range of platforms, including Solaris, Irix, SVR, SunOS, OS/2, DOS, Linux and Windows. It also supports the common extensions to the standard UNIX or DOS environment such as Emacs, Vim, vi, JEE, J++, C++, Python, Java, Tcl, M4, C5, GOS, GNU, CPAN, Info, Make, perl, C and Shell. In addition, it supports all the common filesystems. Development is sponsored by the North South Institute and is released in two forms - the editor only, and the editor plus a tutorial and reference manual.
